

Invites you to learn about
Over-the-Counter
Hearing Aids

Kevin Franck has over 20 years of experience helping people hear better from the .com, .edu, .org and .gov perspectives. Currently he is the Director of Audiology for Mass Eye and Ear / Harvard Medical School, where he oversees the clinical, educational and research activities of the department and sees adults with cochlear implants. He is on the Board of the National Hearing Loss Association of America. Kevin and two colleagues at start-up Ear Machine sold their company to Bose to conceive and launch their first hearing assistance product and the regulatory strategy to make it compatible with the future over-the-counter hearing aid products
